

GMD included in ISI Citation Index

After assessing the quality, number and characteristics of papers published in Geoscientific Model Development since its launch in 2008, and its unique remit in terms of model descriptions, Thomson Reuters have announced that they will be including the journal in their ISI listings. This is excellent news for the journal and reflects the tremendous efforts of the editorial board and the quality of papers submitted to it. We are delighted that they will be backdating the listing to the first issue of the journal, and look forward to further strengthening the journal's profile, and the quality of geoscientific modelling research, into the future.
